HOW MRS. JOYCE KEPT HER CHIL-DREN AT HOME.

Tale of Child Misery in West In dianapolis-Test at Brightwood -Suburban Notes.

Mrs. Lynn Joyce, living at No. 570 West Morris street, in West Indianapolis, after tying her two little sons to the bedpost, left the house early yesterday morning and started out upon her own business. A short time after she left the house the neighbors heard piteous sobs and cries of, "Mamma, | the coming week. come and until me" issuing therefrom. Suspicion was soon aroused that Mrs. Joyce had tied her children so that they could not get away before she returned, vestigate the matter. Arriving at the house, Officer Dugan and those accombeen the guest of her brother, Mr. Charles panying him found the gate so securely tied Rehling, and wife, of South Gale street, reon the inside with a piece of rope that they could not unfasten it from the outside and were obliged to jump over the fence. From the rear yard could be heard the sobbings | Churches of the city Tuesday evening. of the little children, and, finding the door unlocked, the officer entered.

The first room passed through was the kitchen, which was flithy with dirt, while unclean garments were lying here and there upon the floor. In the next room two little children were found, one about two and the other four years old, and the eldest was fastened to the foot post of a bed by means of a piece of clothesline. The rope was wrapped around his body several times cut it with a knife to free the little boy. faces it was difficult to tell whether they were white or black. Every room was as slovenly as the kitchen and a musty odor from the filth permeated the whole house. before they could be taken away. The youngest boy had been allowed to go filthy | home alive. for so long a time that after the dirt was removed his face, ears and hands were found to be covered with sores caused by the filth.

The Joyces have only lived on Morris street about a week and none of the neighbors knew them, but Patroiman Diltz said that the family formerly lived on River avenue, in the suburb, and that the children have never known anything but neglect. They have been left to roam around the streets at will when the mother was at home, and when she went away the little fellows were kept at home by the strength of a rope. The children were brought to the city and given in charge of the Children's Guardians' Home. The police are now looking for the mother to place her under arrest.

Test at Brightwood. The Big Four Company is making tests on engine No. 313 at Brightwood in order ascertain the side thrust sustained by the front trucks of locomotives when founding curves. The device is attached to the front wheels of the front truck and consists of a number of springs arranged on the side of the journal boxes, and from these springs the side pressure is conveyed act and proper location of truck hangers in order to minimize the friction on the swing of the truck. A detailed report is being made by the committee appointed at the last master mechanics' convention for the purpose of this investigation. Another new device to be used in painting box and flat cars was completed at the shops last week. It is a ten-gallon tank, mounted on a pair of trucks, so that it can be moved about where wanted, which is to be filled with paint. Connected with the top of the tank is a hose carrying a direct connection of compressed air into it to force the paint downward through another pipe and haif-inch hose at the bottom of the tank. An air pipe connects with the lower pipe, through which the paint is forced, and reduced tube enters the paint pipe and allows the air to mix with the paint. The result is that when the hose is turned upon a car the paint is sprayed against the sides by the air, and the company thinks that such a coating is good enough for ordinary

FELINE PHILANTHROPY.

Protection for Cats That Seems Rather Excessive. Philadelphia Times.

Philadelphia, among its many peculiar and humanitarian institutions, has a cat home, amply endowed, where abandoned and homeless pussies are given shelter and protection. Of the tender care given the cats there can be no possible doubt, but the extent to which the oversight of the animals is carried might seem surprising to any one not fully posted in feline philan-thropy. Of course, they have a corps of physicians and are as carefully treated almost as the inmates of an infant asylum or old ladies' home, and a record of every cat and its family history and pedigree, if possible, is kept. But it is only when some one wants to adopt a cat from the home that the full range of the aegis of the institution becomes apparent. A well-known lady in the fashionable quarter, after an ineffectual attempt to drive off mice in other ways, was advised to get a cat, and was told that there would be no trouble in obtaining one at the home. Upon going there she was told that an application blank would have to be filled, and that only a manager or the founder could let a cat go. It happened that one of the managers was a near neighbor, and to this socially distinguished lady the cat seeker went and sent up her card. Not being seeable so early, as it was only noon, the maid asked the nature of the interview desired, and being told it was cats the private secretary came and took down in shorthand the statement that the cat seeker was not particular about age, breed or color-simply wanted a mouser and would take good care of the animal. After awhile the secretary cat in the home over which her mistress had control (no managers being allowed to dispose of any cat she did not put in or that cat's kittens), but it was a nice cat, and inasmuch as the lady's name was familiar to the manager she had transmitted an order for the release of that cat. As luck would have it, however, when the lady went to get the cat the next day she was told that a protest had been filed and they could not let it go. Annoyed and out of patience, the lady left. The next day a prominent lady (not the manager she had seen, however) called upon her, and in the course of a lengthy interview asked her if she ever had a cat before if she was actually cats, if they had a cat next door, and what sort of cats frequented the neighborhood. When the cat seeker said that it was simply to get rid of mice that she wanted a cat her visitor asked her, with a severe air, "if she did not consider that a rather low motive." Finally the visitor put this ques-
